Magazine Writer Elected President Of Press Club

Michael Hudoba, columnist and Washington editor for Sports Afield Magazine, yesterday was elected president of the National Press Club for 1970.

He will take office at the club's annual meeting Jan. 16. The outgoing president is John F. (Pat) Heffernan, Washington bureau chief for Reuters News Agency and first non-American to hold the club's presidency.

Vernon Louviere, associate editor of Nation's Business, was elected vice president in a contested race in which he defeated William Hickman of McGraw-Hill Publications.

Robert A. Alden of the Washington Post, re-elected as secretary, defeating Robert M. Butler of Traffic World. Felix Belair, New York Times, was re-elected as treasurer without opposition.

In a three-way race for financial secretary, Kim Gregory, Columbia Broadcasting System, won over Kenneth M. Scheibel, and the incumbent, Diosdado M. Yap.

Warren Rogers, Look Magazine Washington bureau chief, and Robert Roth, Philadelphia Bulletin columnist, were elected to three-year terms on the board of governors.
